BOSTON, June 28.—Sixteen thousand persons saw New York beat Boston in a sensational ten-inning game here this afternoon, the first of a double header. Chestore started off, but in the fifth he put up such a wild kick over one of Kelly's decisions that he was ejected. Sack Kielnow was included. Powell and McGuire then went in and with a handkap of one run the big bollermaker elapped them over so hard that the champions could only find him for two

Powell advanced him to third by a great drive in centre that a fast runner might have got home on Dougherty then singled, scoring McGuire, while Powell rolled home on Kesler's fly to centre. Dougherty teached third on the same play. He shen made a ludicrous and brilliant steal from starting away as Dineen swung and sliding to the plate before Criser understood what was being pulled off.

Cornell Is Favorite for the Big Race, but Syracuse, Columbia, Pennsylvania and Wisconsin All Have Staunch Supporters and Rooters.

BY MARTIN GREEN (Special to The Evening World.)

POUGHKEEPSIE, June 28 .- The great race of the day, the struggle between the 'varsity eights, aroused the greatest enthusiasm as the crews lined up at the start, cheer after cheer rent air, and Cornell, of course was favorite, but Syracuse, Columbia and, in fact, every one of the starters

Evry man in each crew was wound up to concert pitch and all were con fident of making a good showing.

The greatest crowd that ever witnessed the Poughkeepsie regatta gathered slong the shores along the four-mile course this afternoon. Hundreds who held observation train tickets were unable to get across the river from Poughkeepsie in time for the four-pared race. Fleecy clouds obscured the sun as the four-oared race got away. There was a stiff breeze from the north directly down the stream, a breeze strong enough to warrant that the oarsmen would be materially helped in the trip from a mile above to at the start stand out stiffly, the water was not unduly rough. The tide and wind conditions had flattened the surface. From the shore out the Syracuse, Columbia, Cornell, Pennsylvania and Wisconsin. Whatever advantage might apply to Syracuse because of the inside position was offset in a measure by the better wind further out, which favored Wiscomin. and Pennsylvania.

The Philadelphia crew showed first at the start, closely followed by the others in a bunch. A few Columbia men on the observation train gave the college yell, but it sounded like a whisper compared to the rear that went up from the Syracuse crowd in its three cars. The Syracuse four, although outwelfded by Cornell, looked fit and able to so the distance.

Wisconsin lost a length at the start. Syracuse, Cornell and Pennsylvania gained from the beginning. Columbia, steering wildly, got out of her course and trailed behind Syracuse after the first half mile. Cornell led by a length at the bridge, with Syracuse and Pennsylvania lapped behind, Wisconsin and Columbia entirely out of it. Cornell draw away, with a smooth, beautiful stroke, Syracuse and Pennsylvania fighting it out for second place and making no mistakes.

At the mile and a half Syracuse spurted and drew away from Pennsylvania as though the race had just started. Syracuse's spurt was one of the best ever seen in a boat race. They gained inch by inch, and finally got up in time to win by a scant margin in the fastest time for the course.

At time to win by a scant margin in the fastest time for the course.

in time to win hy a scant margin in the fastest time for the course, making the two miles in 10:15 2-5, minutes, but later this was changed to give Syracuse the race.

The freshmen eights were at the start when the observation grain got back. Here Cornell had the outside position, with Columbia next in shore, then Syracuse and Pennsylvania with the inside track, Cornell lad by a length at the mile, with Pennsylvania and Syracuse side by side and Columbia a trailer by half a length. It was a pretty race between the last three, with Syracuse slowly foreing up, passing under the bridge.

The work of Cornell was like clockwork. Bytacuse was next tests and fine tryical "Rah! Rah!" boy was Conlinued on Second Page.)
